

Aviation & Transportation

Transportation and the investment, creation and/or revitalization of any network is essential for the forward movement of the Canadian economy and connecting it to the world. To be engaged in this space requires a partner with experience and extensive knowledge of not only the transportation sector and its players, but the legal, commercial, operational, regulatory and technical issues that accompany these types of operations.

Our lawyers represent air operators, including domestic and international air carriers, in regulatory, litigious and commercial matters. We provide advice on the establishment of air services and assist in navigating the multi-faceted legal requirements from start-up to mature operation. We regularly appear on our clients' behalf in provincial and federal courts and represent them before the Canadian Transportation Agency, the Transportation Appeal Tribunal of Canada, the Canada Human Rights Tribunal and other tribunals and departments of government involved in the administration of laws affecting the aviation industry.

In the case of foreign operators such as air carriers or other travel intermediaries, we provide a full range of services relating to the day-to-day operations of an aviation business in Canada including, reviewing and drafting commercial agreements, commercial leasing, employment advice, protection of intellectual property, local licensing, privacy issues and business start-ups.

Since 1907 when our then partner, George F. Shipley K.C. was appointed by the Board of the Railway Commissioners for Canada to examine toll rates across the country, we have partnered with our clients that include governments, government agencies, private sector developers, operators, lenders and P3 investors on projects in Canada for governments, government agencies and private sector entities in the air, transit and urban mass transit, truck, bus, and rail sectors of the transportation industry.

Our litigators represent clients in hearings before the Canadian Transportation Agency, the Transportation Appeal Tribunal of Canada, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal and the courts. We also defend vehicle and equipment manufacturers and retailers in product liability claims and class actions.

Representative Experience

- We act for air carriers and the general aviation community (and their respective insurers) in commercial and liability claims, including: Passenger injury claims; Lost, delayed, damaged baggage and/or cargo; Transportation of inadmissible passengers into Canada; and Commercial claims as between aviation industry participants.
- We act for air carriers in complaints before the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal and the Canadian Transportation Agency, including complaints relating to: Presence of kirpans (Sikh ceremonial daggers) in the cockpit of an aircraft; Carriage of obese passengers; Carriage of passenger requiring a medical attendant for travel; Carriage of passengers who require a stretcher; Accessibility requirements of passengers in the airport terminal; and Loss, damage and/or pilferage of checked baggage
- We have acted for dozens of trucking companies, including two of Canada's top 10 largest for-hire carriers. We also act for a number of bus companies, including one of Canada's two largest national bus companies.
- For both our trucking and bus clients, we protect their ability to operate by keeping their CVOR (Commercial Vehicle Operator's Registration), which is, in effect, their licence to carry on business, in good standing. In addition, bus companies require an operating licence under the Public Vehicles Act.
- We have acted on many of the leading cases involving the trucking and bussing industry before the Licence Appeal Tribunal, Public Vehicles Act, and the Ontario Highway Transport Board.
- Cases in which we have been engaged have shaped the test the Registrar of Motor Vehicles must meet for the Tribunal to uphold a proposed CVOR suspension. Don Hislop Trucking Ltd. v. Registrar of Motor Vehicles (October 28, 2004) and Thistleton Motor Freight (2003) Inc. v. Registrar of Motor Vehicles, [2006] O.L.A.T.D. No. 580. We have also argued the leading case on absolute versus strict liability offences and the defence of due diligence in the regulatory context. R. v. Transport Robert (1973) Ltée (2003), 68 O.R. (3d) 51 (C.A.).
